There seems to be no limit to which the telephone can be put to. A friend of the Journal tells of an incident that happened in one of the towns in Cass county, in which an exchange has been put, which beats anything we have heard lately. It is said that a lady desiring to visit a neighbor the other day, pulled the baby's crib up in front of the phone, opened the receiver and calmly told "central" that she was going over to a certain neighbor's and if the baby waked up and began to cry, to ring her up at this neighbor's. She ought to have a patent on that baby tender, sure.—Plattsmouth Journal.

We have received a communication from Mrs. Ellen Hiatt, who is running a boarding house in St. Joe, Mo., in which Mrs. Hiatt says she has finally separated from James Hiatt and wants the people to so understand it. As we came down to our sanctum last Friday morning we observed Sheriff Lawrence diligently searching the streets as though he were tracing a criminal in true sleuth style. Scouting a news item we meekly approached and made a few inquiries which elicited the fact that the sheriff had lost his "gun." The weapon was later found and returned to the sheriff. It had slipped from his pocket when he got out of his buggy at the livery barn.—Brock Bulletin.

Brock undoubtedly has some enterprising merchants, and we have no doubt they are drawing trade from surrounding towns whose merchants are not so enterprising. They carry large ads in the Bulletin, and the ads are exceptionally well written. The Brock roller mills uses a double half column each week to explain why their flour is best, changing the ad each week, and good reasons are given. If their flour is equal to their ads there is no reason why every family in Brock and vicinity should not use this flour—and probably they do. We congratulate the Bulletin man on living in this kind of a town.

Mary Elizabeth Lease, famous as a leader of the Kansas populists a dozen years ago, has recently reappeared in public view in New York, delivering an oration over the body of a friend and making announcement of her belief in spiritualism. She is still passing from fad to fad with almost as much speed as a South American revolution.—State Journal.

In certain districts of New York City the antitheses of society almost rub elbows; on the one side is the unpolished workaday world of the lowly east side, on the other the charm and grace and beauty of the world of wealth and fair women. Side by side, but unknowing and never understanding each other, these people live their lives through, having in common only human interest. In the August Delineator Lillie Hamilton French writes of some of her friends of both these worlds. The pathos of the lives of some and the beauty of others is very impressive.

Much has been said about the liberal wages paid to harvest hands by the Honest Old Farmers of this western country, and the hired hands have been congratulated on their excellent luck. But the congratulating has been done by people who never worked in a harvest field. That is the hardest job under the sun, and it would be impossible to pay too much to the man who stands up under it. Five dollars a day and board would be entirely too small a wage. The harvest hand is expected to get up from his downy couch about the time other people are going to bed. If he isn't at work before sunrise he is written down as a sluggard, and his name will appear on the agricultural blacklist. He has to take his meals on the fly; it is the busy season, and every minute counts. If he wants to rest for half an hour after his dinner he is regarded with loathing. He sticks to his job until after sundown and when he finally does get through for the day he is so tired that he has to lift his feet by the boot straps when he walks to the house. And then he is considered of plutocratic tendencies because he gets $2 a day and his board. A sheaf of oats or wheat does not seem so formidable if you take hold of one when you are feeling good; but by the time you have shocked up a million sheaves, carrying two at a time about half a mile, each one weighs a ton; and they are usually full of cockle burs and thistles, and your hands feel like dead porcupines after a while. We have all kinds of sympathy for the harvest hand, because we have worked in harvest fields. He ought to organize, and demand 50 cents an hour for his time, with peanuts and red lemonade thrown in.—Walt Mason in State Journal.

You never heard any one using Foley's Honey and Tar and not being satisfied.—M T Hill.

Catarrh of the Stomach.
When the stomach is overloaded; when food is taken into it that fails to digest, it decays and inflames the mucous membrane, exposing the nerves, and causes the glands to secrete mucus instead of the natural juices of digestion. This is called catarrh of the stomach, caused by indigestion. Doctors and medicines failed to benefit me until I used Kodol Dyspepsia Cure.—J. R. Rhea, Coppell, Tex. Sold by W. W. Keeling.
